Dinwiddie County Welcomes Dominion Energy

DINWIDDIE, VA – Dominion Energy officially opened its new district office and operations center this morning. The $14 million, 55-acre campus is located on the site formerly home to the Southside Virginia Training Center in Dinwiddie County. The new facility will house Dominion Energy’s distribution and operations teams, which include the service members who work to maintain power lines, as well as designers and engineers.

Dominion Energy Media Relations representative Jeremy Slayton indicated the former Petersburg location served the company well for 60 years. Slayton stated, “We simply need more space for our employees, our equipment, and vehicles.”

Morgan Ingram, Dinwiddie County’s Director of Economic Development stated, “Dinwiddie County is proud to have Dominion Energy’s new office building as part of the County’s business portfolio. This development is transformational for the northern end of the County, and turned out to be a great redevelopment project. The roughly 100 employees that will be located at the new facility will likely patron our retail businesses in the County, and therefore have a positive impact on the local economy. Dinwiddie is thrilled to have Dominion as a community partner in the County and we look forward to the future growth of their new Dinwiddie campus.”

William “Bill” Chavis, Chairman of the Board of Supervisors stated, “Dominion Energy has always been a strong supporter of Dinwiddie County. In addition to lighting up our homes and businesses, they provide educational opportunities for our young people through programs such as the Envirothon; they are a signature partner of our annual Teen Expo; and they employ our citizens, which is vital to the local economy. We are thankful for all that they do in Dinwiddie County and throughout the region; and proud that Dominion Energy chose Dinwiddie as the home of their newest district office.”
